A Brief History and the Ritter Sport Production Process

Ritter Sport's story begins in 1912 with Alfred Ritter, a confectioner in Waldenbuch, Germany. He initially produced chocolate bars in conventional shapes. However, his daughter Clara had a brilliant idea – a square bar, perfect for packaging and easy to eat. This simple innovation transformed the brand, paving the way for the iconic square we know and love today. The Ritter Sport varieties expanded rapidly, driven by a commitment to quality ingredients and creative flavor combinations.

The production process itself is a marvel of efficiency and precision. Ritter Sport uses high-quality cocoa beans, sourced responsibly (a point we'll delve into later). The beans undergo meticulous roasting, conching (a process that refines the chocolate's texture and flavor), and tempering to achieve the perfect snap and shine. The square shape is achieved through automated machinery, ensuring consistency and high volume output. This efficient system allows Ritter Sport to offer a wide variety of unique and delicious

Ritter Sport varieties.
