Case Conceptualization and Treatment Planning in Practice

Let's consider a hypothetical scenario: a 15-year-old girl presents with symptoms of anxiety and depression following the loss of a close friend. Using the Adolescent Psychotherapy Treatment Planner, 2nd Edition, the clinician would begin by conducting a thorough assessment, including exploring the client's history, family dynamics, and coping mechanisms. This information would then inform the case conceptualization, which might highlight grief, social isolation, and low self-esteem as contributing factors. Based on this understanding, SMART goals would be set (e.g., reduce anxiety symptoms by 50% within 8 weeks, improve social interaction skills by engaging in at least two social activities per week). Appropriate interventions, such as Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT) techniques for managing anxiety and grief counseling, would be selected and implemented. Progress would be monitored regularly, and the treatment plan adjusted as needed based on the client's response.
