Key Theoretical Frameworks in Ruiz González's Approach

Ruiz González's approach to social work practice is firmly rooted in several key theoretical frameworks. Her work draws heavily upon:

- Critical Social Work: This perspective challenges traditional social work models, highlighting the systemic nature of social problems and advocating for social transformation. Ruiz González doesn't merely address individual needs; she confronts the societal structures that perpetuate inequality. Her work actively critiques power dynamics and advocates for the redistribution of resources and opportunities.
- Participatory Action Research (PAR): This methodology places communities at the center of the research process. Ruiz González utilizes PAR to ensure that those affected by social issues are actively involved in identifying problems, developing solutions, and evaluating outcomes. This collaborative approach fosters empowerment and ownership among community members. It moves beyond the traditional researcher-subject dynamic, embracing a more horizontal and equitable relationship.
- Feminist Theory and Postcolonial Theory: These frameworks are integral to Ruiz González's analysis of social inequalities. She acknowledges the intersectional nature of oppression, recognizing how gender, class, race, and colonialism interact to create complex forms of marginalization. Her work centers the lived experiences of women and other marginalized groups, giving voice to those often silenced in dominant narratives. Understanding the historical and ongoing impacts of colonialism is crucial to her approach, as it shapes her understanding of social justice issues in Latin America.
- Liberation Theology: This theological perspective emphasizes the preferential option for the poor and marginalized. Ruiz González's social work practice reflects a deep commitment to the liberation of oppressed communities. Her approach is informed by a belief in the inherent dignity and potential of every individual, regardless of their social standing.

3. Action Planning: Based on the community's input, a collective action plan would be developed, focusing on strategies for skill development, job creation, and improved access to education.

4. Implementation and Monitoring: The plan would be implemented through collaborative efforts, with
